Faith of the Fatherless should function as a gateway book to research in all fields examining our current, highly-secularized culture, a culture marked deeply by both unbelief and hostility toward the family and especially fatherhood." - Benjamin Wiker, Author, Architects of the Culture of Death

Faith of the Fatherless - Ignatius Press
In his 1999 book Faith of the Fatherless: The Psychology of Atheism, psychologist Paul Vitz proposes another likely effect of the loss of the father on children: a distance from and doubt of God, which leads in many cases to profound atheism. Vitz develops his proposal as an inverse to Freud's projection theory of belief in God, which proposes "wish-fulfillment derived from childish needs for protection and security" as the major psychological factor leading to religious belief in God ...
