But there was a chink of light with The Pan Book of Horror Stories, a series that introduced a generation to the tradition via a fine collection of new short stories leavened - in the early days - by some classic oldies. The series petered out in the 1980s, by which time Stephen King, Peter Straub, Ramsay Campbell and the rest had ensured that novels were back in fashion in a big way.

I also spent a lot of time reading, in the form of tatty paperbacks that in the school playground and on the school bus were constantly borrowed, read, returned, borrowed again and read again, a series called The Pan Book of Horror Stories. The first of this series had been published in 1959, under the editorship of the strikingly named Herbert Van Thal, a literary agent, publisher and author whom the critic John Agate had once likened to 'a sleek, well-groomed dormouse'.

Gluckman is terrified, still in a state of shock and ignorance owing to his experiences - he doesn't even realise that the state of Israel exists. But there's another horror from the past lurking in La Paz, and with it, an examination of abusive relationships the world over.

Booksquawk: THE SIXTH PAN BOOK OF HORROR STORIES

The Pan Book of Horror Stories series. Just wondering if anyone remembers this series of morally improving [1] horror anthologies from the seventies and eighties. I was surprised to find out that the first in the series was published as long ago as 1959 (!), having assumed by their sheer omnipresence in petrol stations, post offices, newsagents, off-licences, chemist's shops and train stations throughout my childhood that they were strictly a phenomenon confined to those decades.
