Ralston-Purina pet food company and the American Youth Foundation. Danforth was a successful entrepreneur who spent much of his life helping and counseling young people and founded a youth camp in Michigan dedicated to mentoring youth. In this influential work, he expounded on his belief that a healthy and productive life depended on keeping four important elements in balance. These elements were physical, mental, social, and religious. A person must develop each element individually, but must not focus on one element to the detriment of the others.

Danforth also believed in the importance of dedicating one's attention and efforts to the task at hand and treating each job and day as the most important one over popular because it calls for courage, swift and daring. But in the eyes of you, one of the priceless few, I trust will come a gleam of battle as you read on. You can be a bigger person than you are and I am going to prove it to you. -adapted from the Author's Preface

'Who wants to do unimportant and uninteresting things? To develop your gifts to the largest possible use - that's your dare.' William Danforth inspired generations of people to aim at the best that is in them and now, 70 years on, we can dare to do even more with modern ideas of personal growth and achievement. We can use developments in the science of psychology that were not available to Danforth so that we can take his ever-popular motivational messages and incorporate evidence-based research on thinking and behaviour change. Now we can 'aim for the best we can be' even more successfully. Life is a four-sided affair. This book dares you to develop the physical, mental, social and spiritual aspects of yourself and tells you how to do it using current examples and practical exercises.
