Writing and Producing Television Drama is essentially a collaborative process; there are no isolated writers in their garrets here, no man or woman is allowed to exist in splendid isolation - they are expected to pitch in, work together and pull with the team. That goes for production crew as well as the writers on the team.

TV WRITING TIPS & TRICKS: Television Drama Series - What ...

Usually, scripts for drama series are around 60 pages, though a fast-talking show like The West Wing sometimes went to 70 pages. On networks that break shows (for example Lost) into five acts plus a teaser, writers are stuck with reduced screen time, and find themselves with eight page acts and scripts coming in around 48 pages. Each script is timed before production, and if it runs long (despite the page count), the writer needs to know what to trim in dialogue or which action to ellipse ...
